7. Choose a setting/world for your movie to take place. You can choose 1 or two actors.

8. Design your scene. Choose a set, soundtrack, actors, and the actor's voice.

9. When you've found the set you like, click "Apply."

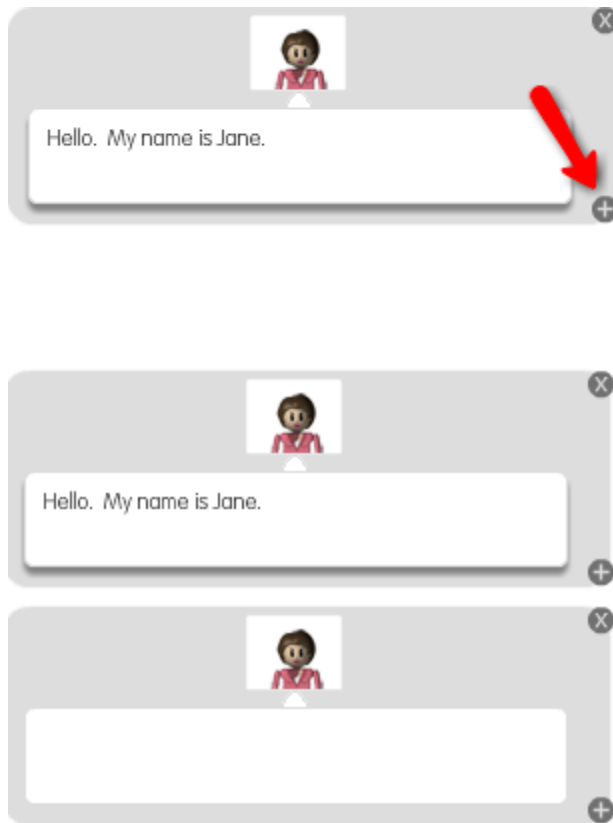

10. Choose ambience (background noise) and/or music. It may be best to pick one or the other since your character will be talking as well. When you have made your selection, click “Apply.”

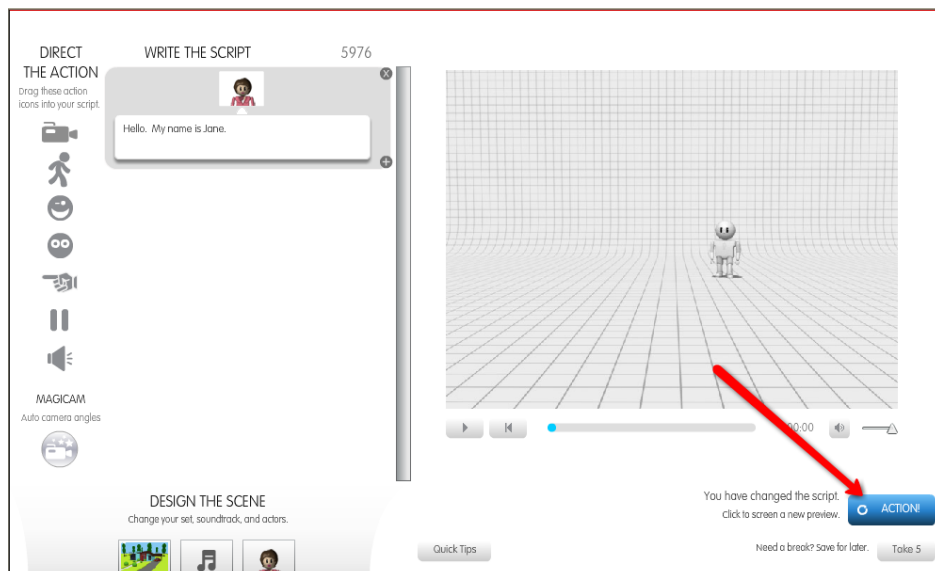

9. Select your character and you can choose different voices for your character. Click the play button to preview the voice. When you have made your character and voice selection, click “Apply.”

10. Type your character's lines in a script block. To make a new script block, click the + sign.

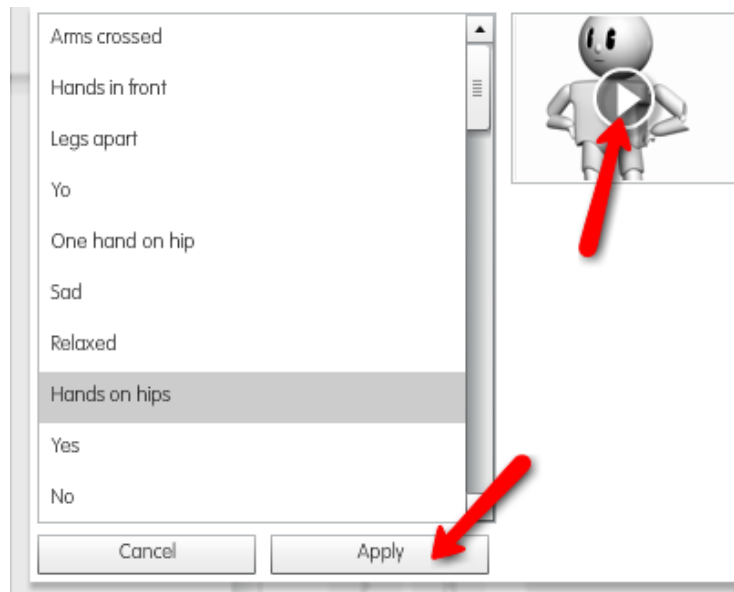

11. Anytime you make changes, and you'd like to see and hear your movie, click the blue "ACTION" button on the bottom right corner of the screen. This takes a minute to load, but when it's ready then you can click play to see your movie! Notice the "Take 5" button at the bottom of the screen. You can always save your movie and come back to it later.

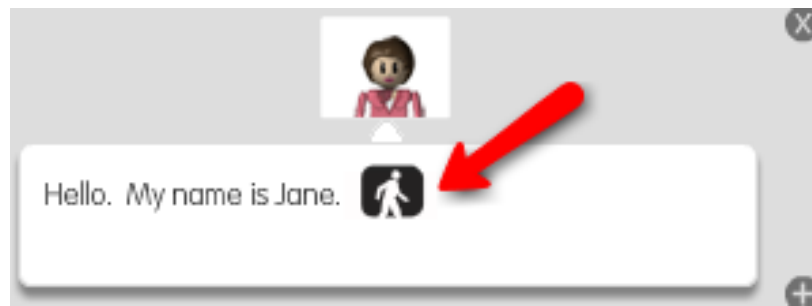

12. You can drag camera angles, actions for your characters, and sound effects into your script. Just click on the picture and drag it over to your script.

13. For example, drag this picture  to the end of your sentence in the script block. A menu will appear and you can now choose an action for your character. Push the play button to see what the action will look like. When you have selected an action, click “Apply.”

14. Now that you have selected your action, your character will do this action in the movie. For example, I selected “Hands on hips.” When my character is finished reading the line in the script, she will put her hands on her hips. You can move the little pictures around in your script to change the timing. For example, if I moved the action to the beginning of the sentence, my character would put her hands on her hips before reading the line.

15. You can use the same technique of dragging any of the icons below into your script. Remember, at any time you can preview your movie by clicking the blue “Action” button.
